Family is bilateral but lineage is a unilateral descent group. It consists of all the consanguineal blood relatives who claim their descent from a known common ancestor or ancestors who existed in reality in the known past. The ancestor is not a myth as is the case with a clan. Lineage is an exogamous group. It is a unilateral descent group. It implies that a lineage includes all such family members who belong to the father's line alone. If the ancestor is a male figure, then the lineage is called patrilineage. The descent is traced in the male line from father to son. If the lineage is traced from a female figure it is called matrilineage. Matrilineal group trace relationship to each other through the mother. Lineage member may or may not share a common residence. Joint family is also an example of lineage where members of three or four generations may live together.
